Have a Great Weekend!

CBD and Children: What Parents Should Know

The buzz about CBD is inescapable. We're hearing claims that CBD helps alleviate everything from stress to cancer. Some people are even giving it to children to treat things like anxiety, inattention and behavior problems. Though it is extracted from marijuana or hemp, CBD doesn't make you high. But that doesn't mean it's risk-free for children.

This week on childmind.org we explore what we know and don't know about CBD (short for cannabidiol), and what the risks are in giving it to kids. The only drug containing CBD the FDA has approved, Epidiolex, is used to treat a form of epilepsy in children as young as two. While the preliminary research on other uses is promising, it hasn't been proven to be effective for mental health symptoms. We also don't know how much CBD unregulated products on the market actually contain, what else they might contain, and how CBD might interact with other medications a child is taking. That's why our expert recommends waiting for the science to catch up with the enthusiasm before giving it to kids.
